My Estate Planning Tool Kit

Stories to Guide Your Estate Planning Strategy And Useful Forms You Can Adapt to Your Personal Needs

A Custom Edition for the Country of Mauritius

Aloha, Namaste and thank you for requesting Hindu Heritage Endowment's Estate Planning Tool Toolkit. You will feel a great sense of satisfaction and relief when your Will and/or Trust is completed. This toolkit will help you take the first steps toward that goal. It includes:

- Basic estate planning information from the American Bar Association
- An Estate Planning Inventory Form to organize information before you visit your attorney
- Values Planning: Questions to Ask before You Plan Your Estate
- How to Remember the Hindu Heritage Endowment in Your Will

This toolkit also offers a practical guide to many non-legal issues including your wishes regarding final arrangements, and a list of where important documents are kept. The Hindu Heritage Endowment wants you and all its donors to have effective estate plans: Wills and/or Trusts that are properly worded, signed, witnessed, and not contradicted by other binding arrangements you may have made and practical instructions from you that will help your family get through a difficult time.

Effective estate planning usually takes time, effort and a good attorney. But in the end your plan will allow your family to avoid the delay, dissension and needless expense that often occurs when a loved one dies without a Will.

Once you have taken care of your family's needs, please consider a thoughtful bequest to Hindu Heritage Endowment. Your gift allows you to help preserve the rich heritage of Hindu thought, practice and culture for future generations.

If you have any questions about the enclosed, please call our planned giving specialist Phil Murphy at (415) 457-7482

ESTATE INVENTORY FORM

This form is not as bad as it looks, and it could save you and your attorney valuable time. By filling out this form and bringing it to your first appointment, you will be providing your attorney with much of the information needed to draft an estate plan.

We may spend many hours planning a small trip of a few days, deciding what to wear, what gifts we will take, planning out travel schedules and so on, but how many of us have formulated a careful plan for our final journey, the greatest one of all?

Depending upon the laws in your country, it is wise to seek proper legal advice in creating your will and keeping it current. However, even before you seek professional advice, you can save time and money by thinking through the basics of your will. A good approach is to write down the four P's of estate planning:

• Persons. who are the people and charitable interests for whom you would like to provide?

• Property. List all of your property, in whatever form, along with its cost and today's value. This includes personal property, such as stocks, bonds, automobiles and jewelry, as well as land and homes.

• Plans. Consider how you would like to "match" your property with the persons in your life.

• Planners. List all professional advisors who can assist you in making your plans a reality.

Records of Personal Information

At the time of a person's sudden illness or death, family members or friends are often faced with the need for certain information. It is extremely helpful for them to have access to a record of insurance papers, marriage and birth certificates, bank account numbers, investments, etc.

For married couples, each spouse should compile separate information and prepare separate documents, although many of the materials will be the same.

This booklet can help you make decisions about what is to happen to your assets and your corporal self at the time of incapacitation or death. It also provides a place to make and keep a record of the information others would need. It is important to keep it up to date and in a place known by at least one other family member or a close friend. Review the information periodically, preferably with the person(s) who must use the information. We suggest that you make one or more copies of the information sheets after completing them. Keep one copy with important papers and put others in sealed envelopes and give them to trusted persons. Instructions are not legally binding, but show the intent of the person signing the form as of the date signed.

To Whomever Takes Responsibility for Final Arrangements

In calm recognition of the inevitable, I have given thought to my personal wishes concerning my final arrangements. I feel that the effort I have made to pull information together and state my wishes will minimize the emotional strain on my survivors. I do not wish them to be burdened by the great pressures of having to make immediate decisions on unfamiliar matters that inescapably must be made if I do not make them now. Difficult though it may be for me to set this down, I feel that my loved ones would find it more difficult to make the decisions with no indication of my specific wishes. Though these wishes may not be legally binding, I trust that they will help my survivors avoid confusion, extra expense, or the least self-reproach that might arise because of doubts, omissions, or commissions.

REMEMBERING THE HINDU HERITAGE ENDOWMENT IN YOUR WILL

SAMPLE BEQUEST LANGUAGE

TO USE IN YOUR WILL OR LIVING TRUST—IN CONSULTATION WITH YOUR ATTORNEY

Having thought through the four P's, there are four different ways that a gift in a will can be made. They are:

- 1) a percentage of the estate.
- 2) a fixed dollar amount.
- 3) specific property such as stocks, bonds or real estate.
- 4) the residue of the estate.

The following sample wording for each of the four ways of giving is provided as a general guideline to use in wording your will to include a gift to HHE. Similar wording can be used for bequests for each person you want to include in your will. However, be sure to consult with legal and financial professionals before the wording of your will is finalized.

1) "I give ______ percent (______ %) of the rest, residue and remainder of my estate to Hindu Heritage Endowment."

2) "I give, devise and bequeath to the Hindu Heritage Endowment, the sum of ______ dollars (RS ______)"

3) "I give the following described property:

to Hindu Heritage Endowment."

4) "I give all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate to Hindu Heritage Endowment."

For an unrestricted gift to HHE, the following wording should also be included:

"Hindu Heritage Endowment (HHE) is a charitable trust whose Federal Employer Identification Number is #99-0808924, located at 107 Kaholalele Road, Kapaa, Hawaii, 96746-9304, USA. This gift to HHE is to be assigned at the sole discretion of the HHE trustees to one or more existing or new funds and may be commingled for investment purposes with other funds administered by HHE without restriction as to permissible investments. The principal of this gift shall be held in perpetuity, and the income (as determined by HHE) may be distributed to the beneficiary institutions."

For a restricted gift to HHE, the following wording should also be included:

"Hindu Heritage Endowment (HHE) is a charitable trust whose Federal Employer Identification Number is #99-0808924, located at 107 Kaholalele Road, Kapaa, Hawaii, 96746-9304, USA. This gift to HHE is to be assigned to the fund _______ and may be commingled for investment purposes with other funds administered by HHE without restriction as to permissible investments. The principal of this gift shall be held in perpetuity, and the income (as determined by HHE) may be distributed to the beneficiary institution(s.)"

The Option of Writing a Codicil

If you already have a will you have the option of writing a codicil which contains a paragraph you would like to add to an existing will or living trust, may be drawn up, notarized and attached to your existing estate document(s). If you do this yourself, the entire codicil should be written in your own hand.

The following is an example of a codicil for a specific bequest.

"In addition to the will I executed on (Date of Will), I now desire to add this provision for (name of charitable organization, such as "Hindu Heritage Endowment" printed here) located at (address of charitable organization, such as "107 Kaholalele Road Kapaa, Hawaii 96746-9304 • USA" printed here) namely to provide (specify percentage of estate or dollar amount, or describe asset) to be used for (specify particular fund or write "where most needed")

Reflecting on the All-Important Will: USA and Mauritius Laws on Gifts to Hindu Causes

illions, in fact billions, of charitable dollars can turn on how estate planning laws are written.

In the US alone, more than $20 billion a year flows from the estates of the deceased to nonprofit organizations like Hindu Heritage Endowment and the Kauai Monastery. But in Mauritius, where almost half the population is Hindu, hardly anyone writes an estate plan, much less makes bequests to good causes. One reason is the law governing the disposition of estates at death.

In the US, one has almost limitless control on the disposition of one's estate. Parents, for example, can legally favor one child over another by disinheriting or giving a lot less to his or her siblings. Or the parents can disinherit them all. You can't do any of that in Mauritius.

When it comes to gifts from parents to heirs, Mauritius law insists on equal treatment, according to Manon Mardemootoo, a senior attorney practicing law in Mauritius since 1970.

Mauritius is what attorneys call a "forced heirship jurisdiction." Parents must reserve a portion of their estate for their children according to rigid formulas: One-half of the estate must go to an only child, two-thirds if there are two children, three-quarters if there are three or more.

After the parents have died, the surviving children can go to court and contest lifetime gifts to their siblings, Manon explains. "The other children may lodge an action for a court order directing that the sale be declared a disguised donation, the property be returned into hotchpot (the blending of property to ensure equal division) and that the favor be reduced and or limited to not more than a quarter or a third or half depending on the number of heirs left."

Forced equity among heirs takes away an incentive to write a will. As Mr. Mardemootoo points out, "The law provides that when someone dies his wife and children inherit in equal proportion. Many of us just leave it at that, knowing that it is automatic."

Another significant difference is estate tax. In the US, the tax at death can be as high as 45% on very large estates. Estates over $3.5 million in value are vulnerable to tax, and people with that kind of wealth often do serious estate planning to minimize the bite. In Mauritius, there is no estate tax, and so no plans are needed to avoid it. "Estate plans, even simple wills, are very rare here," Mr. Mardemootoo says. "Maybe one percent of the population has a will."

He regrets that this is the case. "A plan is needed for an orderly disposal of one's estate," he asserts. But, he adds, the lack of estate tax and the fact that parents can control only the disposition of one-half to one-quarter of their estate, dampens enthusiasm for estate planning, which is never a task people relish.

Even when estate tax law encourages written plans, lots of people avoid doing one. In the US, despite far greater control over their estates and their vulnerability to estate tax, only about 50% of US adults have a will or trust.

The Hindu Heritage Endowment and Kauai Monastery have been encouraging estate planning in the US by offering all who ask a complementary estate planning toolkit.

In places like Mauritius, where the law offers little incentive to draft a will, HHE and the Kauai Monastery can only hope a spiritual motivation will prevail.

As Satguru Sivaya Subramuniyaswami (Gurudeva) wrote years ago in Living with Siva, "Siva's devotees dutifully save for their future through Hindu Heritage Endowment and prepare a formal, final will and testament, even when young, that provides funds for their family and temple." It's a precept his followers hope will be heeded both in Mauritius and the US.

A woman leaves her physical body and is received by her guardian devas in her astral body at the moment of her Great Departure. She is happy that—guided by her estate planning tool kit—her personal and financial affairs are settled.

Tale of Two Brothers Shows How Crucial the Choice of One's Trustee Can Be wo brothers, never very close, were surprised when their 85-year-old mother called and asked them to meet with her. She would not tell them why. "My friends at the senior center keep telling me I'm crazy not to have a living trust," she told them when they met at her aging Victorian on the edge of town."I want you boys to help me."

Amol, a hotel manager in his late fifties, lived just north of San Francisco with his wife. They had two adult children in the area. His much younger brother, Partha, a software engineer, lived alone in San Jose, in Silicon Valley. Amol, to Partha's relief, found a local estate planning attorney. In three weeks the trust was ready for their mother's signature. The two brothers were named successor co-trustees with equal powers.

All went well for three years. Then Amol, who visited his mother often, found her one weekend afternoon unable to continue a conversation. The diagnosis at the local emergency room was transient ischemic attack, a temporary lack of blood to the brain.

Shortly after they arrived at emergency, his mother was fully alert and clamoring to go home. But they spent the next five hours waiting for tests and the doctor's report. The doctor could find nothing specific, but insisted on overnight observation. The mother, discharged the next day, left fuming at being kept from her home when she had felt "perfectly fine."

When Amol told Partha of the incident that afternoon, Partha asked pointedly why he hadn't been called right away. "You've kept your distance for the last twenty years, and now you want me to be your personal eye-witness news team?" Amol shot back.

So it went for four more years as their mother continued to suffer fainting spells and diminished capacity. Partha regularly second-guessed his brother's decisions. Amol grew resentful of the time his mother required of him as the nearby son. Then one of Amol's children began taking what Partha thought was an unseemly interest in the value of his grandmother's estate.

The damage to already tenuous family relationships was substantial. So far, the brothers have avoided taking each other to court, but just barely.

Amol and Partha's story, though fictional, is a composite of true stories. Despite situations like these, estate planning attorneys continue to promote living trusts because they work so well in most cases, allowing families to handle major assets without court intervention and bypassing probate. But many living-trust boosters have tempered their enthusiasm by emphasizing the need for great care when selecting a successor trustee.

Having the love of a parent is not the sole qualification. Trustees need to have the competence to manage assets, the discipline not to consider property in a trust as theirs, the ability to cooperate with others, and the self-control to exercise fairness, honesty, respect, courtesy and good faith at times of great stress.

No matter how well written your living trust is, the choice of your successor trustee remains crucial to its fulfillment.

The Hindu Heritage Endowment wants you to succeed in your estate planning efforts and, through them, both care for your family and remember good causes like the Iraivan Temple Endowment.

We've placed a brief trustee code of ethics on our website which you may review at www.hheonline.org/trustee_ethics. shtml.

Use care when selecting a trustee for a living trust. Otherwise, contention among family members may arise, as shown here. Choosing a qualified trustee helps ensure harmonious conditions.

An Advance Health Care Directive Saves a Family Grief

S anjit Sharma had slipped into a coma from which, his doctors said, he would not awaken. His grieving family, however, had one great consolation: Sanjit had put down in writing what he wanted done in just this circumstance.

Rather than debating if and when to take their father/grandfather off life support—remember the Terri Schiavo case contentiously argued in the US Congress?—they referred his doctor to Sanjit's advance health care directive.

"I already have that in my files," the doctor told them. "Sanjit gave us a copy when he was in the hospital five years ago."

The family breathed a communal sigh of relief. They still had many issues to face, but Sanjit had lifted from their shoulders this delicate decision. Besides saving them from conflict at a time of great stress, he also saved his estate from the enormous expense of high-tech but, in his case, futile medical treatment.

The advance health care directive, also known as a durable power of attorney for health care, is a legal document, similar to a living will, that lets your physician, family and friends know your health care preferences, regarding the types of special treatment you want or don't want at the end of life, your desire for diagnostic testing, surgical procedures, cardiopulmonary resuscitation and organ donation.

The Hindu belief in the rebirth and reincarnation of souls transforms death from a calamity to a natural process, a means by which the soul sheds one body and continues its evolution in another. But our technical ability to keep patients alive and the natural inclination to prolong the life of a loved one can create conflict among family members who are keeping vigil by the bedside.

By completing an advance health care directive, you, like Sanjit, can avoid having your family making crucial medical decisions for you at a time of emotional turmoil, and assure that your wishes are fulfilled.

Most US states have a form you can fill out to express your health care wishes. If you have Internet access, google "Hawaii Advance Health Care Directive" or "California Advance Health Care Directive (California Probate Code Sample Form)." Ideally, have an estate planning attorney guide you to make sure your wishes conform to both state and federal law. Your health care directive will allow you to make clear:

What is important to you when you are dyingSpecific medical treatments you especially want or do not want • Whether you want to be in a nursing home, a hospital or at home

• Your preferences regarding palliative care/pain

management and hospice care

• Who is to make sure your wishes are carried out

Keep your original signed form and give copies to the person you appoint as your agent and any alternates, your physician, family members, and the health care institution providing your care.

Don't rely on this brief article for authoritative guidance. Again, your legal advisor is your best resource.

For more information on advance health care directives, visit the Hindu Heritage Endowment website, www.hheonline.org, and click on Planned Giving, then Essentials and then Living Wills.

Lacking an advance health care directive, a family is forced to resolve its conflicts in a court of law

Durable Power of Attorney: When You Need to Give Others Control of Your Property

re you out of your mind?" So thought Aditya, a well-traveled engineer in his forties with an international client base, when his attorney first suggested he name someone to control his bank accounts, make his mortgage payments and complete and sign his taxes.

Too polite to speak his misgivings, Aditya revealed them in his face. "No, no. I'm not asking you to give away the store," the attorney said with a smile. "These powers would spring to life only when you need them."

"For example?"

"Let's say you had a serious accident on one of your trips. Doctors confirm you can't manage your finances for a while. If you have completed a durable power of attorney for property management and finance, someone you have chosen could immediately pay your medical bills and mortgage."

"And if I haven't done this, what would happen?" Aditya queried.

"Without it the court would have to appoint a conservator for you," the attorney explained with a grimace. "That's called, logically enough, a court conservatorship. In some cases it's the only solution, but, believe me, you want to avoid it if you can. It's expensive and unpleasant—after all, they have to discuss your mental competence in public. And in the end they may appoint someone you would not want."

" 'Power of attorney' does not imply an actual attorney, does it?

"No. 'Attorney' is used in the broad sense of someone acting in your place and on your behalf, not an attorney-at-law like me."

"How important is this document?"

"Well, after I had given an estate planning seminar and reviewed the tools of the trade, an emergencyroom nurse who was in the audience spoke up. 'Accidents happen. Everyone should have a durable power of attorney for property management, no matter what your age, if you own property and have bills."

"Is it a long document?"

"It can be, depending on what you want your representative to do," the attorney said. "This is typical," he added, handing Aditya something that looked like an accountant's to-do list. It read:

• Make deposits and withdrawals from bank accounts

· Sign tax returns and appoint qualified individuals to represent the principal with the IRS in order to make investment decisions

- Deal with retirement plans, including IRAs
- Have access to the principal's safe-deposit box
- Create a living trust and fund a previously created living trust
- Revoke or change beneficiary designations
- Vote the principal's stock
- Forgive or collect the principal's debts

- Enter into contracts on behalf of the principal
- Make gifts on behalf of the principal
- Disclaim gifts or bequests made to the principal
- Deal with life insurance on the life of the principal

There were a few people, very few, to whom Aditya would give these powers. He did not relish a judge he did not know making that choice for him.

"Let's get it drafted," he declared.
